

FACING A SOCIAL SECURITY REVIEW?

PROTECT YOUR DISABILITY BENEFITS?

You need your Social Security disability benefits in order to make ends meet. But occasionally—every three years, seven years or longer—Social Security reviews your benefits to decide if you can keep receiving them. It's called a Continuing Disability Review (CDR), and it can be scary.

THIS IS WHAT YOU DO FOR YOUR CDR:

- Fill out a form.
- Send new medical evidence.
- Possibly undergo tests and evaluations by a doctor chosen by Social Security.

FORM

MEDICAL EVIDENCE

TESTS/EVALUATIONS

WILL SOCIAL SECURITY CONDUCT SURVEILLANCE ON ME?

- Social Security could send someone to follow you and see if you're doing physical activities suggesting you could work.
- Social Security could try to catch you on video doing something your impairments are supposed to prohibit.
- Social Security could monitor your social media accounts looking for signs that your medical condition no longer hinders your capabilities.

DISCOVER YOU'RE ENGAGING IN PHYSICAL ACTIVITIES

CATCH YOU
ON VIDEO

MONITOR YOUR SOCIAL MEDIA
ACCOUNTS

HOW DO I PROTECT MY BENEFITS?

When you receive notice that Social Security is conducting a disability review, avoid activities that push the limits of your health condition. Follow your doctor's orders. And get an experienced disability advocate, like the ones at Mathis & Mathis Disability Advocates, to protect your benefits. A review does not have to mean you will lose your disability income.

GET AN EXPERIENCED
DISABILITY ADVOCATE:

MATHIS & MATHIS
DISABILITY ADVOCATES

MATHIS & MATHIS
DISABILITY ADVOCATES

CALL US TODAY!:

800-462-8447

MATHISDISABILITYADVOCATES.COM